Suggested questions to ask to assess further

Question 3: If the client answered “yes, now” or “yes, in the past” to this question.

- Tell me what’s going on with you now. In the past.
- Have you been in therapy for this? How do you feel about therapy?
- Are you on medication to help stabilize you? How do you feel about connecting to a mental health provider?

Question 6: If the client answered “yes” to this question.

- Tell me what’s going on. What are you experiencing that had you answer yes to this question?
- Have you been in therapy, rehab, contacted the domestic violence hotline, or contacted your local social service agencies to get support for your current situation?
- How do you think your current situation would impact your ability to participate in an abortion healing support group?

Question 7: If the client answered “Often or Most of the time” to this question, refer to therapy. If the client answered “Rarely or Sometimes”.

- How is your daily living being impacted?
- What could you do to improve this for yourself?
- How would the impact on daily living affect your ability to participate in an abortion healing support group?

Question 8: If the client answered “no” to this question.

- Tell me how your family/friends/partner are unsupportive of your healing.
- How does their not supporting you affect you?
- How do you think your participating in an abortion healing group would affect you and them?

Use the way your client responds to these questions, their tone of voice, body language, and other “stressor” identifiers to assess client group readiness. If the client is willing to go to therapy to stabilize before participating in a group, consider making a referral to a clinician or licensed therapist, encouraging the client to come back to you once they feel they are ready for an after abortion healing group.
